

National Interior Designer Howard Brown brings creativity to the city of Dallas

Dallas, Texas – Howard Brown has first-hand knowledge of art and design through life experiences, travel and intuitive abilities. He has worked in various professional roles where his creativity, organizational management and relentless eye for custom design surface on a grand scale. In fact, Howard is in a sort of a “resurfacing” mode himself to the Dallas area.

Howard Brown was born and raised in Dallas, attended school here and has recently invested a significant portion of his time designing and defining fine interiors for local residents and businesses. His natural affinity for the area is definitely a plus for customers because Howard is especially adept at using local artisans as a way of giving something back to the community he was rooted in.

Howard was amazed when the opportunity to work in the Dallas market presented itself. He has already made a name for his venture, Howard Brown Design, in Atlanta, California and Washington, D.C., so he knew the “Holy Spirit” was at work when he received his first client referral here in the “Big D.” His sense of style in each of these dynamic cities has been clearly evidenced in the homes of sports clientele, career professionals, and prominent “African Americans who have a keen style and grace that is unique and diversely defined.” Howard’s return home is evidence that he’s ready to make a difference in Dallas and ready to take on this challenge.

In 1985, Howard formally became an Art Broker and his talents in this area and interior design have been nothing short of phenomenal! He has been extremely successful in getting the work of promising artists into galleries, corporations and into the hands of art collectors.

His interior design expertise has been the “talk of the town on “A Woman’s Place, a regional cable show in Atlanta, Georgia. One five-star Chef in the Atlanta area praised Howard’s work so much so that his handi-work was featured in the November 2004 edition of “Living Space” magazine. Howard’s easy nature, but demanding and discerning eye, make him a fresh and welcome addition to the Dallas, scene. This young brother’s spiritual essence, combined with his obvious talent, forms a winning combination in any specter.
